

Dear Mr. President,

When I was first asked to work in your administration I couldn't believe my own ears. I agreed to do it because I hoped you would be a signer-in-chief and let those of us who knew what we were doing handle the real work. I've never seen someone work so hard at failing. This whole thing would have worked better if you would have done nothing at all. Your value to your own administration is less than nothing. You have set a whole new set of precedents for what it means to be utterly useless and incompetent.

The chance of this Presidency accomplishing anything of value has gone down the tubes. Hopefully, when all is said and done, our country will have learned something. You're kind of like the psychotic college sweetheart that came before the person you eventually marry. Our country will look back and remember you for the restraining orders that were left in your wake. You're old, you're rich, what in the hell do you have to gain? Resignation is a very good option for you. Quietly disappear into the background. I promise you'll be much more popular as soon as you stop talking.

Sincerely,

A member of your staff
